I'm Hope Cassity, and I'm planning a MUSIC IS MEDICINE College Tour for 2024. I aim to deliver a dynamic, engaging, and inspiring experience, surpassing your typical college speaker talks. I'd like to offer this program to you and your student body.

During my time with your students, I'll share my journey battling Ovarian Cancer, along with my published research on how music heals the brain and body. Using creative coaching, audience participation, sing-alongs, and demonstrations, I'll illustrate how music and art became my lifeline. My mission is to empower others to use these mediums in facing life-altering challenges.

I'm particularly passionate about educating college audiences because OVARIAN CANCER IS THE LEADING CAUSE OF DEATH IN GYN CANCERS, affecting more young women aged 20-40. Diagnosed at 38, I stress the importance of early education and action.

My talks cater to CO-ED audiences, offering three proactive tips for early cancer detection. I'll provide students with educational music/art/psychology tools for overcoming challenges faced in young adulthood. Find interviews and more about my mission at the end of this email or in the attached ONE SHEET.

More information about Hope Cassity:

Hope Cassity invites you to join her on a transformative journey, using the power of music and medicine to inspire resilience and spread hope. Hope Cassity is more than a musician; she's a beacon of hope. From overcoming early-life adversities to her ongoing battle with health challenges, Hope has earned the moniker "The Comeback Kid" for facing life's tribulations with grace.

Her journey began with sacrifices, dropping out of school to support her family amid her father's terminal illness. Determined to defy the odds, Hope earned a full tuition scholarship through a GED program at Alabama Southern Community College. Graduating as the John B. Allen Most Outstanding Scholar, she further secured All-Alabama and All USA Today All Academic Team Full Scholarships, totaling over $70,000.

Hope pursued pre-medical studies and Psychology at Texas A & M University, where her love for music and its healing properties emerged during a psychology class. Graduating in 2004 as the first in her family, she achieved a top 10 percent standing in her class. Her groundbreaking research in Industrial Psychology and Music and Medicine Journals challenged the prevailing notion of the Mozart Effect, demonstrating how preferred music alters brain responses to spatial intelligence.

Her remarkable journey continued as she collaborated with renowned brands such as BMW and Aloft Hotels, selling out two Masterclasses with Marriott International and Moxy Hotel Brands, earning her a spot among top masterclass instructors. Performing in Hollywood at THE WORLD SYNC SUMMIT and recording with Grammy-winning musicians, Hope also established herself as a respected visual artist and songwriter in Nashville, TN.

Amid her fight against cancer, Hope founded a successful creative coaching business, bringing music and art healing activities to those in memory care, battling Parkinson's and dementia. Her visual art graced Huntsville Alabama Women & Children's Hospital, garnered attention on WKRN news during the pandemic, and is currently showcased at Kreate Hub Art Gallery in downtown Nashville.
